

(Continued from front flap) ...and then seemingly overnight, homo sapiens (modern man) burst on the scene rearing great civilizations and high culture, with a grasp of complex and advanced disciplines such as astronomy, mathematics, and engineering that rival their contemporary counterparts and defy rational explanation to this very day. This is fact, not fiction.

For example, in ancient ruins found in Lebanon today there exist temples whose foundations are constructed of precision cut stones quarried from miles away, some weighing in excess of 1,000 tons each—far more weight than any modern crane, vehicle, or lifting device can bear. The same is true of cyclopean monoliths found in the walls of the lost cities of the Incas high in the Andes mountains of South America. How can these things be?

THE MUSTARD SEED envisions a most astonishing answer.

The Mustard Seed—An Alternate Version of Human History

Book 1 of The Mustard Seed Trilogy

Something has been found...

Deep beneath the desert sands of Saudi Arabia, an oil exploration crew stumbles upon a massive underground complex, filled with ancient artifacts, priceless treasures, and a mysterious and deadly secret chamber. Two men die of severe radiation exposure within minutes of venturing into the chamber. A third desperately clings to life. Dr. Helen Knight, a world renowned nuclear physicist, is brought in to help with both the containment of the radiation danger and to help investigate its underlying mystery.

What waits for Helen and her colleagues inside the chamber will not only change her life forever in unimaginable ways, but potentially result in the upheaval of the entire world. Actually, the issue is not what waits for her buried in the heart of the earth, but who—the ancient geneticist who has been trapped in a cryogenic vault for the last 4,000 years, the scientist who originally created the hybrid creatures that modern science calls homo sapiens.

“Robert E. Gelinas is a heck of a storyteller. He grabs you on page one and pulls you through more twists and turns than your favorite thrill ride, and keeps you guessing all the way.”

What if all of ancient history, all that is commonly believed throughout the world about human origins and the birth of civilization, was all a lie—a deliberate distortion designed to conceal a dangerous but profound truth about mankind? What if many ancient myths, legends, and lore were in fact actual depictions of earth's true history?

THE MUSTARD SEED is a work of fiction. Yet it deals with the eternal clash between science and religion, the perpetual struggle of fact versus faith. Predicated upon a wealth of historical and archaeological documents of antiquity, and voluminous contemporary scientific research, this story serves to posit an alternative cosmology, where much of the debate can finally be laid to rest, and a devastatingly new unified truth emerges. This fast-paced thriller is guaranteed to both shock and mystify, leaving you wondering whether or not this fictional flight of imagination might actually contain an uncanny measure of historical truth.

Theologians have vainly struggled for centuries to twist logic and common sense to circuitously manufacture allegorical or spiritualized explanations for the puzzling facts detailed in the biblical Book of Genesis, Chapter 6. Who were the “sons of God,” the Nephilim, who according to Holy Writ, wantonly impregnated human females and produced such deadly and degenerate mutant offspring that God Himself saw no other option but to destroy all of mankind in a massive deluge?

Modern scientists have similarly struggled to explain in their own blind orthodoxy how human evolution progressed upon a relatively straight line for millions of years, advancing to the primitive homo erectus stage... (continued on back flap)
